

My driverless car

The driverless car that I just bought
Delivered herself at five.
She beeped three times to let me know
That she had just arrived.

Lying on the left side seat
Where driver used to be:
The owner's guide and warranty,
Two copies of the key.

First of all, the booklet said,
Show her where she lives.
Just point to door, she'll open it
And drive herself right in.

I pointed to the center bay,
I'd cleared and swept the floor.
She headed there without delay
And drove right through the door.

I called the seller, he told me
Perhaps they hacked her brain.
That could have happened, I agreed,
Come get her just the same.
